

Early Signs of Breast Cancer

Why Early Detection Matters

Finding breast cancer early allows simpler treatment and better outcomes. Symptoms are often painless at the start, which is why awareness is important.

Common Early Warning Signs

- A new lump in the breast or underarm
- Change in breast size or shape
- Skin dimpling or redness
- Nipple turning inward or unusual changes
- Discharge that is not breast milk
- Persistent breast or nipple pain

Less Common but Important Signs

- Thickened skin or rash
- Sudden one sided swelling
- Warmth, heaviness, or unusual texture

When to See a Doctor

Contact a doctor if you notice new lumps, worsening changes, blood stained discharge, or anything that feels unusual for you.

Screening and Prevention

Mammograms and regular screenings help detect cancers that are too small to feel. Talk to your doctor about a schedule that fits your risk level.
